Madeline Mask

Madeline Mask hails from Stowe, Vermont near the Canadian border. She has an older sister, Helen, and a twin sister, Genny. Because her parents were Marylanders and her grandmother still resides in Reisterstown, Madeline discovered Notre Dame. A conversation with her high school counselor prompted Madeline to travel to Maryland to visit the campus. She fell in love with NDMU's intimacy after experiencing an incredible Admissions tour. The initial visit prompted Madeline to select NDMU and to become an Admissions Student Ambassador. She loves books and reading and has a desire to share books with the world. She declared English as her major at the beginning of her college career. Madeline intends to put her degree to use working for an editing or publishing company or possibly in the marketing field.

In 2015, Madeline spent the Winterim semester in London, her first time overseas. She treasured the experience as it offered her a chance to see firsthand things she had read about in books. The highlight of the trip was visiting Jane Austen's house, Madeline's favorite novelist. She shared this love with her best friend who was subsequently killed in an automobile accident. Visiting the Austen house in person evoked special memories for her as a result. She will spend this fall semester working for Dr. Farrington, Notre Dame's professor of English and Drama, as a teaching assistant for British Literature Perspective, Madeline's favorite class. She also enjoys participating in theater and has worked with Lauren Romagnano (another Moore scholar!) to revitalize the drama club, Ye Merrie Masquers. Madeline is truly grateful for the Moore Scholarship and thanks all of the donors for this honor!

Serena Souter

Serena Souter has known from an early age the wonderful lessons and joy that come from the love of reading. She is grateful to her mom who introduced her to all reading offers.

Serena elected to pursue her love of reading/writing at Notre Dame, a school known for its excellence in academics and small class sizes. The decision to major in English was as natural to her as breathing. She feels blessed to find that "doors have just opened for me, to make my dreams a reality".

Serena, a Glen Burnie resident and the oldest of 8, is setting the bar for her siblings. She is the first of her family to attend college.

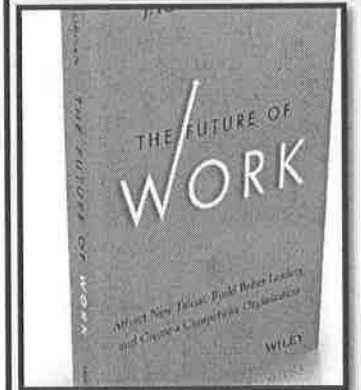

This past summer Serena was employed at a HVAC company where she capably learned effective office skills. Sundays find her volunteering at Temple Baptist Church as a nursery worker. She is accomplished at crocheting when she puts a book down! Above all, Serena describes herself as faith-focused and determined. God is her daily source of guidance. She credits this relationship with her confidence in knowing if she sets a goal, she will achieve it.

Celebrating the Scholars

The Scholarship Committee has been making awards for eight years. Hands down this is the fun part of the work we do. Actually meeting the students and witnessing the impact we have on their ability to pursue an English degree at Notre Dame University makes all the behind-the-scenes work worth it. In the early years our annual award presentation was a small affair that included only a handful of people. Beginning 2014 we decided to share the fun by inviting those who financially support the scholarship. We hosted a lovely event as a way for our donors to meet the young women whose lives they affect. After all, we want you to see first-hand how grateful these young women are for the support. We're happy to say this annual event has gained momentum and that our attendance list has grown to include honored donors, past Moore Scholars in addition to the current recipient(s), English faculty and Notre Dame staff.

The life stories of our current and past scholars, their excitement for education, their passion for the written work and their career aspirations are amazing. Because of their commitment we remain committed to you, our donors, and to providing scholarship support to those young women focused on English who are attending Notre Dame.

Clare & Robert Moore

Clare Moore was a lifelong teacher of English, Drama and Speech at various Maryland schools. She and her husband Robert strongly supported higher education, regarding it as a means not only of maximizing an individual's potential but also as the catalyst for fostering a desire to contribute to the community and to the wider world.

Together, they raised seven well-educated children, each pursuing various fields of study while actively contributing to his or her chosen profession and respective community.

In honor of their parents' memory and devotion to education and language, these descendants established this scholarship fund for a student attending Notre Dame, Clare's alma mater.
